

The Windrush

HMT Empire Windrush began sailing in 1930. It was originally used as a cruise ship and passenger liner. However, during the Second World War, she was used as a troopship. At first, she was used to transport German troops from country to country but was then taken over by the British Army to carry British soldiers. On one disastrous journey back to the UK in 1954, a fire broke out killing four engine crew members. Fortunately, all 1276 passengers were saved before she sank in the Mediterranean Sea. The wreck still lies 2600 metres below the surface of the sea.

One of Empire Windrush's most famous journeys was in 1948. After many young men and women lost their lives during World War II, Britain had a shortage of workers and needed more labourers. The British government invited people from Jamaica and other British colonies to come and work in the UK. Therefore, the Empire Windrush was sent to collect 492 people from Jamaica and bring them back to London. These people worked in industries such as transport, rail and the National Health Service. Although many of them only planned to stay for a few years, the majority stayed in the UK permanently and have been a huge influence in changing British culture.

Sadly, life wasn't always easy for the new arrivals. Many were treated unfairly by white British people and they even found it difficult to find basic things such as somewhere to live. In 1959, an annual carnival was started in Notting Hill, London as a celebration of people's differences. It continues to bring people from various communities together to this day and is famous for its vibrant colours and exotic dances.

Did You Know...?

People living in the Caribbean saw an advert in a newspaper offering them passage to Britain and promising them work once they got there.

Although things are getting better, many immigrants still suffer the effects of discrimination and racism today. In 2018, many people who had lived in Britain for years since immigrating were wrongly arrested. Some were even deported from the UK (including those that had been living there since they were a child). This has become known as the Windrush scandal.

The Windrush

HMT Empire Windrush (whose first name was MV Monte Rosa) was originally used as a cruise ship and passenger liner and began sailing in 1930. During the Second World War, she was used as a German troopship but was then acquired by the United Kingdom and used to transport British troops instead. She was then renamed Empire Windrush. In March 1954, on her way back to the UK, a fire broke out killing four engine crew members. Fortunately, all 1276 passengers survived but the ship sadly sank in the Mediterranean Sea. The wreck still lies 2600 metres below the surface of the sea.

In 1948, after losing so many soldiers and young men in the war, Britain had a serious shortage of workers. The British Government tried to encourage members of the British Empire to come and work in the UK. As a result, Empire Windrush made one of its most famous voyages and brought 492 passengers from Jamaica to London. These people later became known as the Windrush generation. Although many only planned to stay for a few years, the majority of people remained in the UK permanently. Many of them worked in industries such as transport, rail and the National Health Service.

Sadly, it was not always an easy life for many of the Windrush generation. A lot of white people did not welcome them to Britain and treated them unfairly. They sometimes struggled to find housing simply because of the colour of their skin. Clashes between white people and black people were so serious at times that riots broke out in some major cities. Although things are getting better, many immigrants still suffer the effects of discrimination and racism today - in 2018, many people who had lived in Britain for years since immigrating were wrongly arrested, and sometimes even deported from the UK (even if they had been living there since they were a child). This has become known as the Windrush scandal.

Despite these difficulties, the Windrush generation have played a vital role in changing British culture and by the start of the 1970s, West Indians had become a familiar and established part of the British population. In 1959, the Notting Hill Carnival was created as a celebration of diversity. It is now an annual event in London, helping to bring together people from different communities. It is famous for its colour, exotic dances and vibrant atmosphere.

The Windrush

HMT (Her Majesty's Treasure) Empire Windrush was originally used as a cruise ship and passenger liner and began sailing in 1930. Her first name was actually MV Monte Rosa. However, during the Second World War, she was used as a troopship to transport German soldiers from country to country. At the end of the war, she was seized by the United Kingdom as a 'prize of war' and was used to transport British troops instead. It was then that she was given the new name Empire Windrush. She served as a British vessel until March 1954 when, on her way back to the UK, a fire broke out killing four engine crew members. Fortunately, all 1276 passengers survived but she could not be rescued and eventually sank in the Mediterranean Sea. The wreck still lies 2600 metres below the sea.

In 1948, Britain was recovering from the ravages of war. After losing so many soldiers and young men, Britain had a serious shortage of labourers. The British Government tried to encourage immigration to members of the British Empire by offering cheap travel to anyone who wanted to come and work in the UK. This attracted many African-Caribbean people. As a result, the Empire Windrush made one of its most famous voyages and transported 492 passengers from Jamaica to London. These people later became known as the Windrush generation. Although many only planned to stay for a few years, the majority of these immigrants remained in the UK permanently. Many of them worked in industries such as transport, rail and the National Health Service and created a large proportion of British workers.

Sadly, it was not plain sailing for many of the Windrush generation. A lot of white people did not welcome them to Britain and treated them as inferior. Caribbean immigrants struggled to find housing simply because of the colour of their skin. They felt excluded from much of the social and economic life around them and faced much racial discrimination. Clashes between white people and black people was so serious at times that riots broke out in some major cities. However, despite facing these prejudices, the Windrush generation have played a vital role in changing British culture and by the start of the 1970s, British West Indians had become a familiar and established part of the population. In 1959, the Notting Hill Carnival was created as a celebration of diversity and is now an annual event in London, helping to bring people from different communities together and to promote social cohesion. It is famous for its colour, exotic dances and vibrant atmosphere.

Although things are getting better, many immigrants still suffer the effects of discrimination and racism today - in 2018, many people who had lived in Britain for years since immigrating were wrongly arrested, and sometimes even deported from the UK (even if they had been living there since they were a child). This has become known as the Windrush scandal.
